1. Choose one ITSM role from the handout. Explain its main responsibility.
    - I will choose the Service Manager role for this question. A Service Manager acts like a boss who leads the IT service team. Their main job is to clearly define what specific services the team will provide. They also make sure these services actually meet the goals and expectations of the business.
2. Why is a Service Manager important in an organization?
    - A Service Manager is important because they connect IT work with the company's business goals. They figure out exactly what customers expect and how much a service will cost. They also prepare a blackout plan to protect existing services when new changes are made. When sudden problems happen, they quickly step in to restore the service to normal.
3. How does a Service Team help improve IT services?
    - The Service Team watches how well a service works after it is put into action. They use tracking data to measure if the service is doing a good job. Because they see this data, they are the first to suggest ways to make the service better. They also help plan for the future by looking at new technology and business trends.
4. Explain why having a good service culture is important in a company.
    - A good service culture is important because it builds a strong and trusted brand for the company. It ensures that customers have a great overall experience from start to finish. It also helps the daily work match the company's true core values. Finally, it makes employees feel happy and proud of their jobs, which makes them want to stay.
5. Imagine you are working in an IT company. Give one example of how you can demonstrate good service culture when helping a customer.
    - In an IT company, I would show good service culture by giving very helpful after-sales support. If a customer calls with a computer problem, I would treat them politely and patiently. I would fix their issue while making sure their whole experience with me is positive. Doing this shows that I truly value good service and helps build a strong brand for my team
