A. Situation or Experience

I've been busy this prefinals period getting ready for our final defense. Most of my time goes into checking what still needs work and going over how to explain our project. When I try to explain one part out loud, I sometimes notice a detail I skipped or a point that sounds clearer in writing than it does when I say it. I make a note of those parts so I can go back to them.

B. Emotional and Cognitive Response

I feel nervous when I think about the questions the panel might ask. Sometimes I switch from reviewing one part to another because everything feels urgent. After a while, I realize I've spent time worrying about what to do next instead of finishing what I started. It helps when I pick one part and talk through it in my own words.

C. SEL Insight

This connects to self-management. When I catch myself jumping between tasks, I write down what I still need to check and choose one thing to finish first. For my next practice, I'll start with the part I find hardest to explain. If I get stuck, I'll check my notes and try again without reading from them.
