Professional readiness is essential for On-the-Job Training (OJT) and future employment because it bridge classroom learning with real-world workplace expectations. Being professionally ready means having both the right mindset and essential skills to handle responsibilities, follow rules, and adapt to a work environment. It ensures that I can build trust with my supervisors and team from day one.

Among my soft skills, I consider teamwork to be my strongest. Working on group projects has taught me how to listen to others, share tasks fairly, and work toward a shared goal. This skill has helped me collaborate smoothly with classmates and solve problems together when deadlines are tight.

During my OJT, I plan to demonstrate professionalism by practicing key workplace etiquette. I will maintain punctuality and attendance by arriving on time, dress in clean and appropriate attire, and respect workplace policies. I will also show initiative by asking clear questions, accepting feedback gracefully, and taking accountability for my assigned tasks.

Overall, these learnings remind me that technical skills alone are not enough. By combining strong soft skills with professional conduct, I can overcome OJT challenges and build a successful future career.
